Typically, nightclubs are very well decorated and have high quality lighting and decorative fixtures. But, what if you're throwing a party at a non-nightclub venue that you'll need to decorate yourself? When it comes to transforming an event venue such as this, you can do a lot with very little funds. You can change the whole mood of a place by following some of the easiest tips found here. You may have to be able to take a dark room and fill it with romance or make a serious looking room more fun. All you have to do is think about the mood that you want and what particular things you can most effectively spruce up.

First, consider adding a splash of color and boldness. You can add some boldness by getting some nice things like cloths and other decorations to bundle or design your room with. If you get a lot of long sheets of interesting fabric you will be able to add both color and boldness to the venue. You can let them hang from the ceiling or have them gently flow through the room. Your creativity has no limits when it comes to adding colors and boldness. The only thing that you want to avoid is colors that will be too bright for the occasion. If you are going for romance, stick with red hues; if you are going for a more fun feel, stick with some of the brighter and bold colors. The decorations are at your discretion, but first, you need to make sure that you don't have any limits because of venue rules. Simply talk to the venue about your decorating plans before signing a contract with them.

You should also think about small, little things that will be great accents. Try visiting low-priced arts and craft stores to find tons of things to use as accents. You may want to purchase scented candles or you may want to use simple things like petals and pearls. When it comes to sexy events, you can't get any more romantic than using rose petals and pearl beads. If you are on a budget, you can find plenty of things like candy, fake crystals, pieces of glass, stones, and other things to place on the tables to accent the room.

Another tip to consider is to use décor items of various heights to add dimensional contrast to the room. You may want to use things like pillars or candle holders to get the dimensions going. If you have a small room, the height will give you some added depth. Tall center pieces on tables can help in creating this effect. You'll want to make sure that the items you get are stable enough so they can't be knocked over. This will keep your guests from getting hurt and prevent any damage to the property.

When you use flowers you are able to change the room entirely. This tends to make everything seem brighter and glowing. If you're going for the more radiant look, you should consider getting some bright flowers to place around the venue. You don't have to go overboard on the flowers, but if you watch your budget, you should be able to squeeze some flowers in here and there if it suits your event theme.

Maybe it is not the décor of the room, but the size of the room that bothers you. If you change the tables in the venue, you will be able to make the room feel smaller or bigger. For rooms or venues that are smaller, you should add round tables. The round tables will give the illusion that there is more room, and your guests will be able to feel it. If you would like to make a larger room appear to be smaller you can always add long square tables into the mix.

The last tip is about the lighting. Lighting is everything when you're trying to make an impact on the mood of your venue. Consider using tea candles with unique candle holders or some other type of cool lighting that can be set on tables or on the bar. Most venues should have house lighting and fixtures that can be dimmed or adjusted to your liking that will fit the vibe of your event. If you're looking to make things more exciting, stop by Walmart and pick up some strobe lights and disco balls. These are very affordable and will put some life into a dead room.
